A series of Community Discussions on Human Trafficking

Human trafficking is a growing problem across the nation, in Wisconsin, and especially in Milwaukee. According to the U.S. Department of Justice, as many as 300,000 American girls and young women are trapped or involved in this vicious industry. The business of human sex trafficking is organized and violent. It is the second fastest growing criminal industry in the United States — just behind drug trafficking. It's difficult to imagine that our own sisters, students, daughters and loved ones could be at risk of being targeted for the industry right under our noses—but they are. Each day, so many of our young girls are forced, by their pimps, into sexual intercourse with countless people or face being beaten, strangled, or worse for their resistance. This is everyday life for thousands of young girls trapped in today's new slave trade, human sex trafficking.
